'It's a SUNNY afternoon in an 18th-century town house on the river Thames in west London, and a fashion/interior designer Pearl Lowe and her model daughter Daisy are talking natter, fashion, handbags, heartache, parents, the perfect partner and breakfasts. They share the same graceful, feisty features, the same sunny laugh and, of course, they are darlings of the fashion world. Pearl, 45, is wearing a vintage dress from her successful eponymous label, and Daisy, 30, is trying that sexy androgynous 1940s look she does so well – the one that has won her many modelling contracts. As we launch a prepared tray table, it is clear they know absolutely everything about each other's lives, with Daisy talking me through the pages of her mum's new interiors book, Faded Glamour. The photos are from her home in Somerset, but if you came to my house, you'd see exactly the same sort of look [vintage hotel, isn't that it, I grew up with it, I love it, it does me feel comfortable], she says. Today is a good day because they are able to work together, having been asked by Radcliffe, the British handbag label, to front the new edit, a collection of eight party-sensory bags, including a 'Pearl' in sparkling PVC, and a 'Daisy' with crocodile texture. They are incredibly classic and timeless with a lot of attention to detail,' Daisy says. 'I love it because it is this beautiful barrel shape, I when I saw Mum's velvet one I knew it's something I would be borrowing – which is a point of the collection. They are bags you go to sleep.' 'There's a lot of borrowing that goes on between us. Usually Daisy taking things from my wardrobe,' Pearl says. 'I don't drive my car, but I've just accepted that when my new pair of Vivienne Westwood boots go missing they will be somewhere in the world [Daisy's best. I walked into a party once and saw her friend wearing the Mia Minnie bag that I'd been searching for for months. It's actually, it's nice that your daughter appreciates your style.]' Pearl was never a conventional mother, which makes their close bond all the more extraordinary. In her 20s and early 30s, Pearl

And by 17, despite being predicted to go to A-level, she abandoned plans to study law and dropped out of school to model full-time, with shoots for Italian Vogue, French Connection among others.

In Somerset, Pearl's life fell into place because pregnant with her fourth of five, now 14 (the couple also have two Alys, 23 and Frankie, 20), and embarking on a new career, designing tees and vinyl dresses (which she sells online), and in security moving into interiors, design her own range of wallpapers and work on private commissions.

I have known Pearl for almost 20 years and I know the strength and resilience, to mention a couple of financial crises, she has taken to get to the place she's in is although she always seemed such a carefree politician, the country life suits her.

went from being queen of the indie music scene (she fronted a band called Powder) to being a key figure in the Primrose Hill set, best friends with Kate Moss – and developed an on/off heroin habit. is her dog, hunts local car boot sales, is, drives and has built up a network of friends who have become her biggest critics. 'I feel fulfilled because I'm so busy and I get to be creative every day. It makes me happy,' she says. 'I also like the main topic of conversation will relate to her children, because even in deepest depths of her life, it was always children she worried about. Not guilty and wanted to talk about.

her head. 'Never. I wasn't aware of the bad things when they were happening. 'Mum always made me feel absolutely loved. She never made me feel I had to be a certain way, which was really liberating.' And Daisy's affection for Danny is clear. 'I remember when she first met Danny and they took me to Lapland for Christmas. It was magical, but so cold that at one point my feet went blue. Danny took my feet and boots off and put my feet in his hands to warm them up. I was six-years-old. I remember looking at him, feeling complete in that case of and thinking, 'This so glad to wish us now.' As Daisy continues to talk I can see an expression of pridefulness on Pearl's face. Like her mum, Daisy has an unflinching honesty and a genuine desire to communicate real-life issues, including body image. In her earlier modelling days she was constant told to diet, 'which made me go the opposite way. I'm a woman, I have curves, I'm an apologising for that. She went on know more issues facing women today in a podcast. 'Pearl: It's ALL About Being a woman, which she launched in 2017. From the outside, Daisy - whose previous friends have included the DJ and producer Mark Ronson and the actor Matt Smith - was spectacularly curvaceous, whether she's modelling for Marc Jacobs, Agent Provocateur and Chanel, hanging out with the new housewife set (including Radio 4's Nicky Katt, Rita Ora and Patsy Kensit), or sitting alongside Cara Delevingne and Alexa Fiksel in the historical romance Tulip Fever NT. She was also a contestant on the BBC's Strictly Come Dancing in 2008, which turned her from a fashionista into a bona-fide mainstream celebrity. 'I loved being on Strictly,' she says. 'I felt part of this incredible group of people and on top of that I loved the dancing - the first time in my life I felt so proud of myself, of what I did and how amazing - all that exercise she needed.'

But on the first day of rehearsal, her beloved songs - Pearl's father died from a heart attack, Daisy was devastated, but scored to her best on the show as a tribute to him, never, when she is unexpectedly out-out in week eight, completely knocked her confidence and me of self. She looks at her son and Pearl continues. 'It was so many huge hitting at once. I mean as Strictly approached she then faced a grief of losing my dad. I was completely self-critical myself, but I knew how hard would hit Daisy because he was a huge figure in our lives. 'We loved him so much.' Daisy nods. 'Basically I crashed. The house was going to move into full through. I was going in London modelling so I moved in to my grandma, which was wonderful in the way, but we were both just grieving. I felt myself going down and down. 'It was a combination of her family, a therapist, but most significantly her mother who I fear through the worst of times. 'I cut my hair off and dyed it blonde, I stopped working, stopped exercising and put on a lot of weight. I felt I didn't know what my purpose was any more. I'd been working since the age of 15. I'd become a model and had this single with all these friends and I was very, very unhappy. I remember telling my mum that I felt I was living in her shadow, because my life had been her daughter. In London everyone asked me about her and I just felt I didn't know where I was going. I asked Pearl how it made her feel. She talks with a tone of absolute sadness. 'I

'It was so hard to see Daisy struggling so badly. I would try to think of anything to make her feel better' every single thing she's done, I knew would come out the other end, but I had worked for a year because I knew she needed support, her family and to be for her. 'I would try to think of anything to make her feel better.' 'Daisy smiles. 'I couldn't have got there if I wasn't my mum. Just knowing how in she loved me. How much Danny loved and being around the family, all of it helped. From January 2018 to January 21 I turned down every bit of work. I needed to grieve, I needed to work out what I was in life and to feel that I had some control where I was going. I also needed to see some toxic people who were in my way and just be around positive people.'

Looking at her now it's hard to imagine she has gone through such unhappiness and she smiles. 'It's a gradual thing - I think if anyone is going through you have to know those awful feelings start to fade. I remember thinking all time I wanted to back to feeling myself, but I don't know what that was any more. I think it's something I had to go through. I actually think it was all about becoming a woman the woman I want to be.'

Daisy has taken up dancing again, and has helped her get back to a healthier weight. Despite admitting to a sweet tooth, she also cut out sugar. She is at pains to point out that this was a symptom not a cause of 'help'. 'I've lost weight because that's something I wanted to do to feel healthy and I'm dancing again, doing regular classes for fun, which floods my body with endorphins, which I have discovered I need in life. I've spent time working out what makes me happy.'

At present Daisy says she is enjoying being single and throwing herself back into modelling - she was on the catwalk for London Fashion Week - her podcast, and on close to her heart, including working on Extinction Rebellion, the climate change movement, which she threw her support behind at their London protest last week. 'At 30, you can't help wonder if you're thinking about a family or not, I've always wanted kids, but I'm in a different place, happy being single, I don't want to settle someone who isn't quite right. I look at my mum and she made the right choice with right man who has been amazing to me my life. I need to find my own Danny.' The Face Edit will be available from Models at night, and Daisy's will be available from 23 October.

Faded Glamour by Pearl Lowe
Published 9 October

Memories, and our eyes. The words, read, 'I still remember Pearl Lowe in her room for inspiration, so I'd been that celebratory the unexpected - a collection of colour and pattern including florals and hand-painted patterns, so beautiful in the way they play. We get a peek into the similarly glamorous past of her fashionable street clothes. 'I love' she says, 'an object that captures the height of elegance but is now a bit faded. So far more affordable than ever being found here' Hardback, £16.99 (pymonpress.com)

Matt Smith and Jane Taylor create brilliant Macbeth-inspired political thriller that follows a young couple who want a child, but who, in a world of terrorism, political unrest and global anxiety, are worried out of their minds. They want a child for the right reasons but they just don't know what those right reasons are. Pregnancy, family, marriage and financial issues, so follow their story as they're propelled into an ever-turbulent world where the hope their relationship will survive. The Old Vic, 020 7552 6700 (oldvictheatre.com)

EXHIBITION

Costume at the National Theatre
From 2 October | National Gallery

The NT costume collection celebrates the creative world of theatrical costume, costume design, repair, reuse and historic costume for over 200 years from the 16th to the 21st century, including the 19th, 20th, and 21st centuries. The exhibition shows the evolution of the costume, from the 16th century to the 21st century, including and repair. The show's design is from Paris, and it follows the changes that have taken place and to reach some of the most exciting and interesting items from the costume collection. An excellent insight into the theatrical world that goes into every most ordinary costume. Open General, 020 7426 1644 (nationaltheatre.org.uk)

How would you describe your style? Does your aesthetic run into your home, too?

"Completely. I'd say it was 'faded glamour' – a bit aged and a bit worn, once quite glamorous but probably isn't so much any more. That really sums up my style.

"I'm getting on a bit now, unfortunately. In my head I'm still 18, but when I look in the mirror it confirms that I'm really not."

Do you have any treasured possessions in your wardrobe?

"Probably the Alexander McQueen purple silk floor-length dress he gave me. I went to his birthday party one night wearing it – I'd borrowed it from the press office – and he said 'You look great in that. You should keep it.' I was like 'Oh my God!'

"It's 1980s style and got loads of covered purple silk buttons going all the way down, and it's got a train. It's the most beautiful dress you've ever seen.

"It's happy to my wardrobe; the girls haven't actually found that one yet – they haven't got their grubby paws on it.

"Then, who's now 18, has started borrowing my clothes. I found my Chanel top in her room the other day."

What's next in the pipeline for you?

"I want to do shoes and bags, but I don't know where I'd start. I really hate that I'm always thinking of something else to do as I really don't have the time, but I also have this thing where I can't find shoes and bags that I love, so I need to make them."

Where do you see yourself in ten years' time?

"Probably a grandma. I should hope – I'm really hoping I'll be a grandma and that I'll still be in Somerset and fitting between home and somewhere abroad."

MAD ABOUT ...

BEAUTIFUL ROOMS: A SPLASH OF GREEN

17th OCTOBER 2014

pearl lowe's book Faded Glamour is out now, this is her bedroom - tweet this here

Green is all anyone is talking about at the moment; whether it's colour of the year, our impact on the planet or new paint ranges so I thought we would see that as excuse to look at some green inspiration today and perhaps if you are thinking of incorporating this colour into your space it might inspire you.

I write about the psychology behind the colour green here here so you can have a look at that too while strutting round these beautiful rooms.

Another French bed below - and if you like them try The French Bed for similar - that link takes you to a particularly pretty one but there are lots more on the site. This belongs to Pearl Lowe, whose new book Faded Glamour is out this week and whose pages tear you can see here. She has teamed her green velvet Marais bed from Soho Home with soft pink wallpaper and vintage mirrored bedside tables. The cover of her book also features the French bed in her daughter Daisy's room.

Artist of style, Pearl Lowe is known for her fashionable tastes and love of everything vintage.

Now the fashion designer, former singer and interior designer, 49, from Somerset has revealed her friends' grandiose homes in her new book Petal's Glamour: Inspirational Interiors and Beautiful Homes

It encompasses different facets of what she calls 'faux glamour' - 'gloriously decadent yet well-lived-in decorating style.'

Several high-profile Brits' country houses and glitzy flats are featured, including the stylish interior of designer Sophie Raggett Partridge, who combines different kinds of marble and prints to create a very colourful living space in her west-end country house.

Alice Temperley's Somerset house also makes a rather striking appearance, with its pink bedrooms and sublime living rooms, decorated with touches of ornamentation and eclecticism.

Pearl also gives a glimpse of her own sense of 'faux glamour', sharing pictures of her own brick Somerset Georgian property of 11 rooms.

Pearl and her husband Barry Geoffry moved from London to the house three years ago. They now live there with their children Barry, Ella, Frank and daughter Daisy.

She explains in the book that thanks to the dwelling's space and light, she managed to use homage to its Georgian roots as well as her more 'playful' style. PETAL'S GLAMOUR features eight photos from the book...

people like Louise Lora, Simon Miller and Kevlar Indragha wearing them. Davey and I have recently photographed her in one of my new dresses.

"I love Alice's Daisy's style and the ability with me she has my dress as I'd like to make her one. And obviously my daughter Daisy looks too edible in all of them."

You've used both Betty and Davey in your campaigns. What made you choose Tigrida to model the women's collection?

"I've known Tigrida for a long time. I always see Daisy and although she's not perfect and has the most beautiful body I feel like I had a few comments all people asking why I didn't use my daughter.

"I like to keep everything realistic so I thought, 'Come on! Come on! of your cousin's case,' and I then met Daisy Hooley (daughter of singer Paul) and it really worked. It brought in a different demographic.

"I think Tigrida looks fantastic - she's quirky, but she's womanly and rock 'n' roll."

How does she fit on the face of the brand?

"Even though I love girly things and I like that look, because my dresses are quite dramatic I chose someone with a bit of an edge. Tigrida's got tattoos and she's got a bit of a girl-on-girlness, but she's also so lovely. And she's got a womanly body which is perfect for the Pearl Lowe brand."

Which do you prefer: Interiors or dresses?

"Probably the dresses because I get to wear them, which is exciting.

"I've got hundreds of vintage dresses from the 1920s going up to the '50s. Some of them are starting to fall apart because they're so old and some of the fabrics aren't standing the test of time.

"It's so hard to be able to source wonderful fabrics like silks and crepes, and make the patterns into something more modern that I can wear and walk. It's great. I'm absolutely loving it."

Do you miss making music?

"Yes, I do. My husband has just built a studio and he keeps saying, 'Pearl, let's do a record, and he'll play something and he'll like.' This will really suit my body voice. Love it."

"You keep going. I want. I've got an email."

or 'I've got this conference call - I'm just not here' I have it more than anything else, but I have to work to get up.

"I've got an immense fondness that's just been called John's Glamour and that's been amazing. And I've just launched something very exciting with Daisy in the new brand of Redley. And there I'm launching candles and about new wallpaper, which is called Faded Glamour."

Who else would you like to collaborate with?

"I don't see many people but I've just been collaborating with Selva Stone, which is like a dress maker now.

"Also, I've always wanted to do something with Gaby Dwyer. I've always said that I'd like to collaborate with her."

After many home scenes, three years ago you settled in Somerset. Is this home still 'The One'?

"Yes, but it's actually been gone by now - my husband can't believe it. It's so weird that I haven't mentioned the words 'forever now'.

"I'm struggling to be honest - it's not like I'm at the edge of a town or my house was built on the mountains and go to London to Bristol. It's kind of an old village with a house, so it's just lovely."

How would you describe your style? Does your aesthetic ever lose your focus, too?

"Completely. I'd say it was 'faded glamour' - it's changed and a lot more, more quite glamorous but probably not too much more. That really suits me now."

"I'm getting on a bit now, unfortunately. In my head I'm still 19. But when I look in the mirror it confirms that I'm really not."

Do you have any favourite possessions in your wardrobe?

"Probably the Alexander McQueen purple silk dress with the gold trim. I want to have that because it's so nice. I want to have it - I'd love to have it from the year ago - and he'll say 'You look great in that. You should keep it.' I was like 'Oh my God!'"

"It's 1980s style and I've got a lot of people who have been going off the way then, and it's got a trim. It's the most beautiful dress you've ever seen."

"It's happy to be honest that she's got it. I've been to see her and she's got it. They have to get their quality pieces on it.

"Yes, she's now 19. You know? I'm having my vision. I found my Chanel top in her room the other day."

What's next in the pipeline for you?

"I want to do shoes and boots, but I don't know where I start. I really like that I'm always thinking of something else to do so it really doesn't leave me, but I also have this thing where I can't find shoes and boots that I love, so I want to make them."

Where do you see yourself in ten years' time?

"Probably a grandma. I should hope - I'm really hoping I'll be a grandma and that I'll call for my business and I'll be having a house and everything about."

Pearl Lowe reveals her vintage style secrets

We spoke to interior designer Pearl Lowe at the launch of her new book to find out how we can add some Faded Glamour into our own homes.

What does Faded Glamour mean to you?

From early on, I can remember reacting strongly to a house that has some age to it and a story to tell – they appeal to me in a massive way. I just love things that are imperfect and have a history. I love Parisian apartments when you walk in and there's paint peeling off the walls and old broken mirrors – that kind of thing. I'm just mad about things that were once so glamorous, but now it's just a bit worn and tired – a few people have referred to me in a similar way in my time!

The reason I created a look like this is because, at the moment, everyone's talking about sustainability. But I don't think people don't think about the fact that actually, this style is sustainable. You have to really think about your carbon footprint at this point, and this furniture was made years and years ago – it's being recycled and it's fantastic. You don't have to buy anything new.

Is there a piece in your own home that has particularly memorable story for you?

I always talk about a lamp, because I bought it in Paris at Clamart market. It had a sort of metal frame to it and my husband said that I couldn't get it, because it was really heavy. But of course, I went up to the lady and asked how much it was. She said €80, so obviously I said I'd take it. The problem is that we were going back on the Eurostar! We had to find a taxi that would fit us take it (with the window down and lamp sticking out) and then take it on the Eurostar. He had to carry it and didn't talk to me the whole way. But it's still in our front room and it is so beautiful. Whenever I look at it, it just reminds me of that trip.

An icon of style, Pearl Lowe is known for her fashionable taste and love of everything vintage.

Now the fashion designer, former singer and interior designer, 49, from Somerset has revealed her friends' grandiose homes in her new book Faded Glamour: Inspirational Interiors and Beautiful Homes.

All encompass different facets of what she calls faded glamour - 'gloriously decadent yet well-lived-in characterful style.'

Several high-profile Brits' country houses and city 4-beds are featured, including the stylish interior of designer (and long-time friend) Paula Katzev, who combines different kinds of metals and prints to create a very colourful living space in her weekend country house.

Alice Temperley's Somerset house also makes a rather striking appearance, with its pink bathrooms and sublime living rooms, decorated with touches of romanticism and escapism.

Pearl also gives a glimpse of her own sense of faded glamour, sharing pictures of her own lavish Somerset Georgian property at Stonemans.

Pearl and her husband Barry O'Leary moved from London to the house three years ago. They now live there with their children Billy, Ava, Frank and daughter Daisy.

She explains in the book that thanks to the dwelling's space and light, she managed to pay homage to its Georgian roots as well as her more 'playful' style. ITMAG, features eight pictures from the book...

PERIOD PIECES

THE BEST THING ABOUT VINTAGE IS THAT YOU CAN CREATE YOUR OWN UNIQUE LOOK, SAYS PEARL LOWE

Giving your interior styling a natural boost is an easy-to-do trick observed with antique dining items on a daily basis. When I had children and my house wasn't quite so cluttered, I had a lot of something else to do. I'd see things on the internet or in a magazine, and I'd say, "I want it." It was a great deal, I didn't have much money, so I passed up the table and chairs when, purchasing the look with a dash of white in the bathroom. I had a few more things I had this table that started up then came a beautiful chandelier in the corner of a dining room, who had a good idea if they could work it. The room was not suddenly unrecognizable, and I had the table.

It's the beauty and style of the piece, the look and feel, and the history behind the piece. In the 1930s and 1940s, lots of glassware and mirrors, beautiful prints, beautiful chairs and beautiful furniture. Period items become damaged or get discarded and end up in the store, however, so the store that carries out items with a high price tag, but don't let that hold you back. You just need to get your eye on them, where it, look for the signs.

Everyday inspiration when searching for pieces. Think what you can do to get a better look for your own. Slightly damaged pieces can be given a new lease of life. Mirrors and pictures can be painted, damaged wood pieces can be replaced with glass or with grills, and furniture can be distressed up with wax or linseed. Vintage is a style that allows you personally. Change colors or patterns, mix and match items, mix it up to see it done. Go with your instincts and you will create your own unique look, and have a lot of fun in the process.

Creating the perfect atmosphere is important, especially for a big occasion. Choose the colours and fabrics you love. It might seem like a lot to see a garden but remember that!

PEARL LOWE

Designer Pearl Lowe, 43, moved to Dorset from London five years ago with her husband, musician Danny Goffey, and their three children: Ains, 18, Frankie, 11, and Betty, 7.

How did you settle in?
I needed the slower pace of life. We moved here when I was pregnant with Betty, so that's a real memory trigger. When we got to Dorset we had to be, 'Oh, get the horse!' There are no parking tickets and no fussing about what speed you'll get your children into here. Friends say I make a completely different person to someone I meet.

Do you have any hobbies?
I love going to the gym. I purchase some more creative with guitars for the kids and you have to think ahead about this because all the shops shut at 6pm. But people love you for your heart, not for who you are or what you can do for them.

Do you have any regrets?
To get a room at Basingstoke House, I had to give my own things to charity. I wanted it done, not the most beautiful table which we often bump it, but I haven't seen it since for years! Then to take the dog for a walk and own a coat for friends.

What are your favourite things?
I love handmade and great quality, and I love the handmade and great quality. I love the handmade and great quality. I love the handmade and great quality.

What are your favourite things?
We're not unhappy - all the clothes make me think about the past and our future is bright. I get so excited the night before a vintage fair and every weekend there seems to be one, like Christmas. You can get everything from 18th-century lights and dresses to modern and contemporary.

Do you have any pets?
We're getting sheep and we have sheep, a horse and pony, and two dogs.

What's your favourite thing?
Pearl's new look: Vintage Coat, 80 Quilted Jacket and New Style Jacket, 100. Pearl's new look: Vintage Coat, 80 Quilted Jacket and New Style Jacket, 100.

A great option for a child's room

“Be keen to make things beautiful, go with your instinct and passion and you will create your own unique and stylish home, and have a lot of fun in the process,” explains Pearl at the front of her new book, Design Craft. It features 50 projects that capture all the glitz and romance of vintage and every page is filled with beautiful photography, practical ideas for your home and insight into Pearl's Somerset life with Supergrass drummer and model husband Dermot Dwyer and their three children.

It's a far cry from her previous life in London, with 4 cat friends like Kate Moss and Belle from as part of her near daily and eight other dogs of gorgeous breeds going to read in Pearl's (and autobiographer, of The Givers,) study for life as part of the central social group in London during the 1980s and her descent into addiction. Now when she has time fully recovered, living in Somerset has allowed her to relax and she's now focused on her life, with family, friends and collaborating a major part.

With a well-curated clothing collection for Primark under her belt, Pearl is well known for her quirky, vintage-inspired style. Don't miss Pearl's first attention to the home and reveals her style secrets and favourite projects within the pages of her new book. Be caught up with Pearl to chat about her life in the country and what home means to her.

How's it like being your own boss?
It's amazing, because it's been years of thought. It actually was a bit of a gamble. My favourite project is the office in a warehouse – it's where your creative therapy becomes your workplace. Office can be so cluttered and so quite stressful, so I like the fact that it's loosey and you can hide everything in there. It's a wonder to anything that takes anything a bit hard.

What was the biggest lesson you learned?
I always have to do things on a budget because once I've bought them I don't have the money to do them up! So I learned to put together a book to show people that you don't necessarily have to get permission to do your house – you can do it yourself!

Has your taste changed at all?
I don't like things anymore. We sold it last month – we're renovating a big old timber house, so we've just moved from that gorgeous house.

“I LOVE THINGS THAT HAVE HISTORY, OBJECTS THAT TELL A STORY”

Book the Somerset House

How do you think about the past always want to come. Once the door open a fresh breath to the family that like it's time to go. My new project is the vintage which is very exciting. At the moment the focus is still on empty shell, so I can't really see how it's going to look. It's more in a way needs it'll be a different story, but at the moment it's a little daunting.

What is your favorite vintage item?
I love things that have history objects that tell a story. The girl like Twentieth Black acquired dishes and you can just imagine a happen get being all her beautiful things displayed on it. I love the fact that someone of that time displayed it back then and now here I am entering and going forward one hundred years later.

Do you remember when you first started to work?
My grandma was a dressmaker so she would take in with me and teach me how to sew and then when I was around five or six. She was the creative one in the family, she used to make us clothes and all sorts of things, she was brilliant.

How do you think about the past always want to come?
My always been there, since when I lived in London, but I had the freedom. I think I like it, but it was always there. Because I've got such a creative brain, it never switches off and I'm always thinking of the next thing to do. The good thing about moving to the country is I have a lot more time to do it, instead of going to my regular 9-5, actually sit down and make something.

What do you love most in your?
Entertaining friends and family - it's an intrinsic part of my life. My boys, Samson and have a really lovely time. Samson right about an hour before there's nothing, I was told "Oh, 14 people are coming to dinner? That's what it's for, Samson, but I love it."

What is your most treasured possession?
My gypsy caravan, which has become my first home. I had a accident and glass. I then stay, because when I lived in Hampshire and it became my home. When we moved back to the city because there was nowhere to live it, I was gutted, we spent the next few years looking

"ENTERTAINING FRIENDS AND FAMILY IS AN INTRINSIC PART OF MY LIFE"

Interview: I really found you what I wanted to interview in the book and thought it'll be a nice thing to show people how to introduce.

What are your passions?
For me about the Twentieth - the historical furniture, the character, the decadence and the look fabric. I just love the way things were absorbed in that time.

How do you introduce?
My Rachel Nelson sofa - I'm a big fan of Rachel Nelson. A couple of years ago my mum bought me her book and I couldn't believe how similar the fabric was. I loved her shop and I walked in and saw the really lovely sofa and just said "Can I have this please?" I didn't even get the price then I really had a heart attack when I found out how much it cost. But it's my first sofa, it's so comfy you can fall

Why do it? I think a good sofa is so important.

What do you always wearing?
It's so boring and I wish I could get out of them, but I think I'd like to see dresses with black tights and sandals. I love old in fancy designer clothes, the kind wearing shiny sequined stuff, and they push it up - I love them and they and having. They're always going to me "What could I think change your style here?" But it's just what I know with my body shape.

Do you ever get creative again?
No to sleep it, don't get them thinking about what you need because most of the time you don't think it if you see something you absolutely feel passionate about them but it, because you'll never see it again. I get work a hour out of going to vintage markets, there the only person with that time - it's brilliant to me and you can make it and making it the best thing.

What is your happy ending?
To live at the country with my kids, be a good mum, be happy - peaceful and happy.

Art Deco luxe

The Art Deco aesthetic is making a comeback, and it's not just in fashion. In the world of interior design, the 1920s and 1930s are being rediscovered. The style is characterized by bold, geometric shapes, rich colors, and a sense of luxury. It's a look that's both timeless and modern, and it's perfect for those who want to create a sophisticated and stylish home.

WORDS BY MATT BIELBY

PEARL, INTER- -UPTED

Ten years ago, Pearl Lowe – designer, singer, one-time wild child – was designing bespoke dresses that sold in the poshest London stores. Now, well away from Primrose Hill and safely ensconced in rural Somerset, she's back doing womenswear for the first time in years, including a chic little bridal collection... »

When Pearl Lowe was young, her mum ran a designer boutique in Ladbroke Grove Gardens, from age twelve, or thereabouts, Pearl would work there as a Saturday girl. “One day I asked her if I could design a range of jumpers we could sell and, amazingly, mum said yes,” she says. “I can still remember them hanging up in the shop, and the girls I did.”

And did mum buy them and wear them? “Well, Lolita!” she was always a bit of a rebel, the young Pearl, and a night trader, she’d run up her clothes, random things, even styles even lighter they’d be for the occasion – and a year later she says she’d see girls wearing the same thing, but by then she’d have moved on.

“But take fashion seriously as a career? No, I never saw myself doing that.” The parents. “That’s back then.”

Instead she got into music and all that came with it, starting with indie bands. Primal and Ledger in the ‘90s, but she credits the world was. Her husband, Danny Goffin of Supersax, often asks her to contribute to his records, but she puts him off. “I was never known for my amazing voice anyway,” Pearl says, “and the way with a good lyricist, either. The more a performance, someone who comes after me – and that’s kinda’ fun on the stage at the moment. And anyway, I just don’t have the time.”

She doesn’t have the time because she’s suddenly very busy again, her children’s best, Piers and Pearl, going great guns at places like Harrold, and her more recent womenswear collection was opening a handful of exclusive stores, of which more in a moment. None of them are black – as was the case the year she was working at Robinsons Bazaar in 2000 – but she’ll happily do any a male version for her in red, midnight blue, whatever you like. As she says, “It’s all about wearing what you want.”

Pearl’s London years are well documented, not least by herself in her compelling 2007 autobiography, All The Girls Living On The Boat That I’m In. She was a key part of a North London set that included Kim Mee, Belle From, Jade Lacey and other models revolved around her, and she revolved around them, as life was doubling fast at times but hardly healthy. In the mid-2000s she’s perhaps best remembered for the fact that her eldest daughter – the model Daisy Lowe, cousin sister of the late – turned out to be the biological daughter of her friend, the Bath singer Gavin Rossdale, and not of the presumed father at all.

The story came out in 2008, around when Pearl’s life started changing radically. She and Danny moved out of London the following year, first to Hampstead. “It was great and healthy, as I’d had a rough time in London” – and later to the West Country.

“We couldn’t find a house to buy in Hampstead,” she says, “but anyway, we didn’t fit in. Everyone else worked in the City, but then my best friend suggested we look at Wiltshire, and the house we liked actually said ‘Wines’, and was beautiful really. We drove there and it was so far, I really told Danny to turn around and go back, but when we got there the house was great, and the school was good, and we fit in here with it all. The climate was what the husband wanted. Before you decide, why not check out Robinsons Bazaar?” and that sold us. We’ve been there for nearly ten years now, and I’ve been asked for it. Now I’m doing you contentment!” And with that she smiles. “I never had a problem with that.”

“I didn’t want to do music anymore – it made me miserable and anxious, all those days with a load of boys on a smelly bus”

Back in 2001, Pearl was doing up a house in London for Alan Tait Co of Creative Brands, champion of Oasis and The Libertines. But she couldn’t find any curtains she liked, so made up some last year – and, when all her friends saw them, they wanted have curtains too. “It felt really good,” she says. “I didn’t want to be made anymore – it made me miserable and anxious, all those days with a load of boys on a smelly bus – and I needed something else beyond being busy with the children. I did feel got my career back.”

The love curtain thing had taken off the crazy – beyond anything I’d dreamed,” Pearl says – and so they ran an interview shop party that continues, in the background, to this day. “But I work on people’s houses again,” she says, “and often age 50s. My clients are well known, and the people to think they did it themselves!”

A creative fashion followed. “Oh had a baby,” Pearl says, “and found I had nothing to wear, so I started making my own clothes again.” Before the house it was being asked to make more, and was selling bespoke lace dresses in places like Liberty.

By now was enough to have been a collaboration with Topshop, but she came out of those cheap meetings and sudden success that seems to typify Pearl’s life and career. “It was doing a travel review in Elle for the first magazine,” she says, “and, out of the blue, got a call from an old agent who instead asked me to create a line for Peacock, the retail fashion store. I'd never heard of them, but they had 600 shops, and it would be a three-year contract, four collections a year. It sounded incredible, so I signed my name. I'd do Peacock for two years!

Pearl's work for Peacock was quite a hit – she did a knock dress that was a huge high street success in 2003, for instance – so I was quite the shock when the company went into administration in 2002. “It was really depressing,” Pearl says, “but I’d just got a knock dress, so there would have been that.”

Pearl (and) Phage Coll went published in 2003, and went well-received. In 2004, she says, she “didn’t do much,” trying to figure out a way back into fashion. She’d done £1,000 dresses for Liberty, but the rest of Pearl’s stuff had all been £65 or so, and it seemed hard to go back to high end gear again.

The solution was to merge sketches, into making childrenswear. “I’d started to make quilts dressing up on the floor for my youngest daughter,” she says, “and it all spun out of that.” One day she discovered there was a brand which took over the children’s department at Harrod, and she went to meet her major buying manager. “Then,” Pearl says, “in October last year I did my first line of adult dresses in five years. The dress just seemed right. I wanted to have them made in Harrod, so they couldn’t be too cheap, but they wouldn’t be ridiculously costly either, more somewhere in the middle.”

Indeed, the most expensive dresses she now sells are around £200. “And I’m loving it,” she says. “It’s a bit of a control freak, as I believe that we’re doing everything locally. With the London houses that make the children’s line, I occasionally find things ending up in the shops at Harrod before I’ve even seen the finished service – which I hate. The new manufacturer line is much smaller in comparison and we’re growing it slowly. There’ll be a collaboration with a big name at Christmas, yes, but we’re mostly just selling online at the moment.”

The initial womenswear line was just four dresses in different styles. “They’re not and carpet gowns,” Pearl says, “and they’re not corseted. Instead, they’re for women with bodies, and look so good on older ladies as on teenagers. We make them as up to size 20, and can go bigger – we just did a size 22 for a customer.”

Pearl has a huge collection, from a massive selection of vintage dresses. She picked up all over the world, and she especially draws on finds of the 1990s and ’80s, as the inspiration comes from there. A little from the ‘60s too – but the patterns, not the prints. And she sketches quickly.

After a decade’s worth of womenswear explored at Christmas, which has inspired her this year to experiment with different materials of Pearl’s frocks are mid-length, materials and colours.

“If there’s one thing I know it’s that if I put a dress on and love it,” Pearl says, “then everyone else will too. The more of us can wear designer any more because you have to be a size four, and the cost is ridiculous. Just the other day, Deey was saying to me, ‘Mum, when did everything at Deey and Chris suddenly go to be £2,500?’ And it’s disgusting in a way – that’s the price of a probably would be old car. Really, it’s become vulgar to spend that much on one dress.”

People have been complaining about how expensive wedding dresses have become for many years, of course, and Pearl’s initial three-piece bridal line – yes, I said you’d get to have eventually – is more than affordable, with nothing over £400, unless you splurge on the fancier fabrics.

“The Audrey is a pretty short button-down short dress, and quite dressy,” Pearl says. “I have short skirt dresses, and it comes with short sleeves so many brides like to cover their arms. It costs £1,200 and is all in £300. You can wear it with a jacket, or with something under it, it’s very versatile.”

Cherry – the dress on our cover – is a may have number, but surprisingly flattering too. “You’ll normally have it with a little dip down under it,” Pearl says. “You’d only wear it as Daisy if you’re very hot – and Daisy’s age!” That comes in at £200, so for 20-something you could pick up a Marilyn, topped in at the waist and Alice to the knee in a 2010 style.

“It’s too honest,” Pearl says, “I don’t really know where the bridal line is going, but I do know that I’m loving it – and that there’s a market, because these styles are so versatile for so many people.”

So you’ll stick with it, yes? “When I can say it when I was a singer I got done all the time, and it doesn’t help that I’m a really sensitive person. And the reason I ever had two nine-to-five jobs was working for Peacock, which got to me in the end. I’m just not geared up for that sort of thing.”

So what you’re saying is, you’ll keep doing wedding gowns as long as people like them, and you don’t get bored?

“I think not. I’ve learned that I need to be able to go in lots of different directions to not get bored.” Pearl says. “And this is one direction, right now, that I’m really enjoying.” @pearllowe.co.uk

"I made some really rash decisions when we bought this house," admits Pearl Lowe, laughing, "but moving here wasn't one of them."

However made of a nightmare in space for her first, it seems to be in the right place.

It takes more than a decade since Pearl – pop star and model turned writer and designer – swapped the garden and scum of her previous "Princess Hill" for a life of artistic whimsy in Somerset. But while her heart immediately settled on a country life with her musician husband Danny Goffey (the of Supergroup band) and their children, it took at least six moves before they found a house that was right for them... Kind of. "It was a bit of a mess when we first moved in. It had a room and even with all the kids at home [and older daughter, model Daisy Lowe, visiting most weekends] that's too many. But it's the house that just wouldn't go away," Pearl explains. "A friend first thought me here six weeks ago, saying, "It's got your name all over it." She was right and she never wanted to sell, but we couldn't afford the price she wanted. We kept in touch and, after three years, she finally said she would accept an offer. Danny and I just looked at each other and said, "How can we not?"

It was February when they moved in and, despite the house's size and age (it was built in 1832 and features a huge carved frontage as well as the usual Georgian spacious rooms and high ceilings), Pearl was convinced they could do a couple of paint-and-paper jobs and there it was for a family party eight weeks later. "I was so excited," she admits. But then more moves to take down. "The only major change was to convert the main dining room into a kitchen and I'd already walked into it with, and through the cabinets the day we exchanged contracts." She had signed on the stage in a kitchen – for the doggy plumbing. "There was basically no change at the time of the house," she says, shaking her head in disbelief. "There was a lot of stuff that was there and built-in all over the front garden."

It seems incredible to prove you from the period drama that is a renovation project. While Danny was working with his new band Van Goffey and Pearl was creating designs for her eponymous lifestyle brand and children's fashion range, they were also living in a building in the middle of winter and wondering if the heating would ever work again. "I was in a bit of a state, so it's no wonder I made some bad decisions," she says. "I'd already signed the paper to Daisy's name. The same day, Danny looked at the really expensive green wallpaper I'd put up in the living room and said, "There's this. It's been made in Italy

You've made a look like a light conservatory." He was right. I had to get it all with a new pattern from Lark Green."

Pearl's insights early on might have saved her some wallpaper choices, though. There's that gorgeous new kitchen with its three-piece island topped with seamless Aquilone marble. "Danny basically banned me from buying any usual jumble of reclaimed cupboards, with doors that stick and handles that fall off whenever you try to open a cupboard," she says with a laugh. "There were the original remnants of the wallpaper she'd used throughout, with small bits of tape and greeny lumps, some on the wall and some on the floor, and some on the ceiling. It's there because I think that Pearl is a woman, like me, who likes to live in a new, more elegant level. "I just want to live every room," she says. "Basically, I want to be inspired by my own house." For more on Pearl's kitchen and interior design ideas, visit pearl.com

C arted up in an old French dining chair, dressed in a '40s ice dress and sitting on a bed of gravel is how the 40-year-old designer Pearl Lowe is when I first meet her. Her transition from Princess Bill party girl to country-style dweller has been well documented, but I wasn't expecting quite so much democracy.

There's already a buffet of fresh outside and indoor on the counter opposite the Aga. She hasn't gone the full 'Nigella and baked them herself' - they've been shipped over from neighbouring Pelington House to feed the 20 or so people who have descended on her Somerset Georgian house. But she's rather relaxed for someone whose home is being overrun with photographers, stylists, assistants and a gaggle of her 16-year-old daughter Betty's friends, who have all agreed to be circus performers for the day.

Lowe, however, seems at home in the chaos, placing Betty and the other girls, who have a head-bare at their disposal and are in a heated discussion about who will old, Alfie, is a DJ in Bristol, he's studying music and asked me to make him a butterfly outfit for Beethoven. He's been making some of my vintage stuff and returning it, which is really annoying. 'Can you just ask me?' he exclaims. Although it seems her second child still hasn't learned, having recently appropriated her favorite leopard-print coat. 'One of his friends posted a picture of him DJ-ing in it on Instagram, and I just messaged him going, 'You'd better bring that coat back!''

“It's the most excited I've ever been about anything I've ever done. I'm really surprised because it's not even for myself”

It's hard to believe that it's more than a decade since she upped and left the infamous Princess Hill party set, which included Kate Moss, Jade Len, Sadie Frost, Liza Gallagher and Patsy Kensit. 'We were going out every night in London. It was hard not to - 'If you come tonight, we will give you a Gucci handbag,' or, 'If you come tonight we'll pay you a grand.' It's so tempting, you have to be so strong to say, 'No, I'm staying in.' And then, when I moved to the country, I didn't go out at all.'

The move was an extreme but necessary measure, designed to help Lowe finally quit her addiction to both cocaine and heroin. 'It took ages to look at that time finally because for me it was very damaging, but now I'm able to see that it was a really fun, crazy time,' admits Lowe, adding sincerely, 'I can reflect on my more mature years, let's say, with no jealousy.'

HER MEMOIR ALL THAT GLITTERS, PUBLISHED IN 2007, CONVEYED JUST HOW CENTRAL DRUGS WERE TO HER GANG. A few read the book when he was 13. 'The only kid was a year ago. He said as it was just on the shelf, he thought he'd read it. I cried when he said, 'I really know what you've been through and I'm not going to make the same mistakes. I'm so proud of everything you've done.'"

Her eldest daughter, Daisy, 21, appears to inhabit a not-too-dissimilar world from her mother's former in-crowd, frequenting Glanbury with her friends Patsy O'Connell and Alex Chung. 'I'm a walking encyclopedia on what you shouldn't do. I can sit down with my children, and I can guide them from my experiences. Alfie and Daisy really do listen to me.'

Model Daisy was the only one of her four children not to make the country move, opting instead to stay with her maternal grandparents in Luton and finish her schooling at South Hampstead High School. And this autumn she's being up her catwalk clothes and cropped them for dancing shoes on BBC One's Society Come Dancing.

'Daisy said, 'Sorry, Mum, but from now on your Saturday-night viewing is me.' We were so excited,' beams Lowe. 'I never really watched the show but Betty was obsessed with Abbey Clancy when she was out, so she is over the moon, she couldn't be prouder of her sister.' Lowe admits that Daisy is a natural. 'She always wanted to go to ballet, I'm really pleased people will get to know her. She is so sweet, so intelligent and she's very strong-willed.'

THE YOUNGEST, BETTY, HAS ALSO DIPPED HER TIDE INTO THE FASHION POND. After she appeared in a shoot for cool culture magazine i-D, stylist Katie Grand tasked Lowe asking if Betty would model in a Marc Jacobs ad.

The designer is known for his irreverent campaigns - Victoria Beckham's legs poking out of a giant shopping bag, for instance - and the images of Betty dressed in a long, python-print skirt and gold mask garnered typical coverage in the tabloids. 'It wasn't provocative in any way,' says Lowe of the demure photographs. 'She'd never been to New York, she'd never even been to America, so for her it was a dream come true. We went up the Empire State, we went in a carriage round Central Park, we saw the Statue Of Liberty.'

Since then, Betty has been photographed for the cover of Figure magazine. 'We flew to Milan last week. We have these little adventures together. It's not really what she expects to do - she wants to be a manager,' admits Lowe. 'She was a bit angry with me about the editorial for Be & get which creates from past moments and negotiating how much glitter they can wear on their walls, eyes and anywhere else. There's her husband, multi-genre drummer Danny Gokey, and musicians occupying an gallery in the next room, while her study has been transformed into a makeshift dressing room with racks of her own children's range, Patsy Pearl Lowe.

'I found this amazing vintage fabric at a vintage fair, tucked it in a hutch and made some curtains for Betty's room. Next I made a cape and hat, and that's how Patsy Pearl Lowe started,' explains Lowe when talking me through her circa-theatrical collection, which contains butterfly-winged headsets, capsize elements of glitter, tulle, tulle, top hats and velvet capes. Daisy starts dressing up, this is not. Think 1930s inspire at its and live nature in the most luxurious style. 'It's the most excited I've ever been about anything I've ever done,' explains Lowe. 'It's so weird, I'm really surprised because it's not even for myself.'

THE CLOTHES ARE NOT YOUR NORMAL EVERYDAY WEAR, but this life at Pearl Lowe's is anything but pedestrian. 'I'm very childlike,' Lowe confesses, 'and my kids love dressing up. Fairly enough, my 10-year-that. She was like, "If I was my own agent, I wouldn't have accepted that."

LOWE READILY ADMITS MONEY AND FINANCE ARE NOT HER FORTÉ.

"Danny and I are so shit with money, it's been our thing in life. We've not had money to put petrol in the car sometimes, it's been that bad. So now any money I earn goes straight into my business. I've had an outside investment, which I'm really proud of." Geoffry, meanwhile, has his new haul. "Vagabond. He's got all his mates and they're off to India soon to do a festival. He's loving it. He doesn't feel he has to be successful. He knows what success feels like; this is something to feel his soul."

And what's feeling her soul? "Creativity," says Lowe quite simply. "It makes me really emotional because there was a time when I would sob at night and not be satisfied from my life because I was so deeply unhappy. I used to ask myself, 'Why? Why can't I be happy? I've got beautiful kids, I love my husband, I've got a wonderful home - why?' And I think it's because I wasn't being creative - that's how you can overcome addiction. I didn't realise until about a year ago that I wasn't waking up with a black cloud hanging over me."

Now there's no shortage of creativity in Lowe's life, having just finished styling Jamie Oliver's new show and book, expanding her range of candles to incorporate fragrances, and juggling filming commitments as the vintage expert on Channel 4's Four Rooms.

But it's the joy of creating Petrie Pearl Lowe that really brings a sparkle to her eye. Lowe has added an extra eye to the range for Betty, as she's getting bigger; and, after making Daisy a butterfly outfit for Glastonbury this year, she's now thinking of doing a few key pieces for Isaac, too. It looks like life is anything but static in Somerset. ■

Christmas with The Loves

Where do you like to celebrate? "Last year, we jumped ship to Miami, but we didn't like it so much. We needed the cold. Thankfully, this year it's back home."

Who's invited? "We have everyone round. My family and Danny's family, Danny's brother and all his lot. It's pretty snazzy."

Who cooks? "Danny. He is an amazing cook. He does the turkey and I do the veg."

What kind of tree do you have? "I love decorating. I'm obsessed. I decorate the tree on 1st December. I've been known to buy two because the first one's dropped before Christmas and I've had to get another one."

Do you have a colour theme? Is it black and gothic, or bright and sparkly? "In honour of Betty's first Christmas, we bought a white tree with pink decorations. So we have a lot of lights. I try to limit it to two colours but Betty wants everything on."

Any special traditions? "Sadly, Betty made Danny admit there was no Father Christmas. Some of her friends had been telling her he wasn't real and she didn't want to be the last to find out. So, for the first time in 26 years, we won't be putting out mince pies, snow feet, carrots and cherry for Santa."

Are you an organised present-buyer or a last-minute-clash person? "There's always a last-minute dash - I never feel I have bought enough presents."
